EVALUATION OF INSTRUCTIONAL MATERIALS

Instructional materials shall be evaluated consistently and systematically to ensure high instructional standards, and to ensure compliance with Connecticut General Statutes, regulations of the State Board of Education, Board of Education policies and procedures.

These guidelines are not intended to supplant the professional judgment of staff who evaluate instructional materials, both student and teacher materials. Instead, they establish minimum standards for acceptability and provide criteria on which to judge instructional quality.

To portray accurately American cultural and racial diversity, and the male and female roles in our society, instructional materials should encourage student to understand the historical roles and contribution of women and minorities, the forces which shaped those roles and contributions, and how and why the contemporary roles and contributions of women and minorities are different.

Limitations: It may be inappropriate to require a pictorial or textual item to conform to these guidelines, for example in reprinting a story by a well-known author or in a painting by an artist, which makes an important contribution to a particular instructional material. In such situations discussion material should have been included, which explains why a particular attitude was prevalent during a certain period in history, and how and why that attitude has changed.

When examining instructional material for adverse reflection on race, creed, sex, etc. the evaluator should make a qualitative judgment with respect to stories or articles having historical perspective. Any description, depiction, inference, label, or retort found to be, by itself, an adverse reflection should not be judged out of context. Rather, the story or article should be examined for appropriate explanations, discussions or other comments included or immediately attached which may overcome the impact of such offending words or pictures. The instructional material should be rejected only if, on a total basis, the story or article would, in the mind of an average student for whom the material is intended, reflect adversely upon a person because of his/her race, color, creed, national origin, ancestry, sex, or occupation.
